Liberal leaders to review party's strategy

Leading Liberals are to spend the weekend in a London hotel reviewing the party's programme and strategy, and the working of the agreement to support, the Government in office, which expires at the end of the present parliamentary session.

It had been expected that Mr. Steel and his 12 colleagues, plus seven peers who have shadow responsibilities in the House of Lords, would issue a statement giving some indication of their views on the future of the Liberal-Labour pact.

But it was indicated yesterday by those organising the conference, which lasts from Sunday afternoon until after lanch on Monday, that there will be no press interviews or statements. Nor is it intended apparently, to reach any decision on the possible renewal of the Liberal-Labour pact in the next session of Parliament.

35-hour week demanded by Post Office engineers

The pressure building up behind wage claims made itself felt yesterday in a demand by delegates representing 123,000. Post Office engineers for a 35hour week from August 1.

In defiance of the executive, the conference at the Post Office Engineering Union voted to insist on a four-hour reduction in working hours to operate from the date of more flexible pay bargaining. On a card vote, delegates gave a two-to-one majority to a six-point plan of industrial action from October 1 if the Post Office does not concede their claim.

Successive government immigration policies have shown too, much concern for mere numbers and too little for the principles of human rights and family life, the John Council for the Welfere of Immigrants says in evidence to the Com-mons select committee on immigration and race relations. The council, which has advised and represented immigrants since 1967, says the obsession with numbers is racialist in its assumptions, impossible in practice, irrespon-sible in presentation and mean-ingless; in application.

It bismes governments, news-papers and broadcasting, and the select committee itself. In evidence published yesterday the council condemns " the misguided and frequently racialist nature of debate about immigration and "the injustices of immigration procedures which are to a great extent the consequence of such debate. Among the most undesirable consequences of present immigration policy, the council says, are delays in processing applications from wives and children in the Indian subcon-

The council lists the following main objections to an immigration debate chiefly on numbers: chiefly on numbers:

Its concern is selective, and debate

There is lighte interest in the arrival of partials, EEC nationals or foreign nationals, but the net loss of population in the postwar period is ignored. There is even a small net outflow of West-Indians, but the council says that does not stop the application of immigration control. The numbers debate pretends to be precise in its contusions, when that is impossible. It fails to present responsibly facts that are readily available.

In such circumstances, numbers are often used to arouse anxienes rather than to allay them. Leaders of the various parties comprizing the Centre Democratic Union of Senor Suárez, the Prime Minister, met in Madrid today for the second day running to discuss his take it or leave it offer to turn the loose electoral coalition

An EEC delegation is to visit Peking early next month for exploratory talks with the Chinese aimed at paving the way for a trade agreement between the Community and China. The team will be led by M Roland de Kergorlay, the deputy director-general in the European Commission's Department of External Affairs.

The basis for the talks will be the draft framework agreement which the EEC offered to negotiate with all "state-trading countries" (that is, China and the members of the Soviet-led Comecon block) in the autumn of 1974. The agreement would replace existing trade links.

was not so. After 1925 the licensing system under the 1847 Act was extended to a new area, namely, the area of the railways. Anyone wishing to ply for hire on railway premises after 1925 Anyone wishing to ply for hire on railway premises after 1925 required a licence under the 1847 Act in spite of the fact that the property was private property.

The position in Cardiff—and in many other places—was simply that the typical taxi driver who wished to serve all customers in the area, whether they came from the sirport, bus station, railway station or elsewhere, would need an ordinary 1847 Act licence in order to carry on his trade. In addition, if he wished to serve customers in Cardiff General Station, he would have to make his peace with the board inasmuch as he would require their consent under their by-laws before he could ply for hire within the confines of railway property.

It followed that the manistrate

Section 76 provided that "In any

Before the 1925 Act was passed the licensing system of the 1847 Act was in force but no right had been conferred on a licensee.
However, it was contended that, under section 76, some new right to ply for hire was thereby conferred.

Mr Slikin (Southwark, Dulwich, Lab)—The best information which I can obtain is that the outward mail which reached Cricklewood Main which reached Cricklewood Sorting Office from Grunwick on Wednesday, June 15 and which consists of approximately 65 sacks, has not been handled by Post Office employees at the sorting office and remain there.

No other outward mail is there. That sorting office does not handle.

That sorting office does not handle inward packets for Grunwick but I understand a number of letters are there and are not being handled. On the information available it would appear likely that there are, prima facie, condituing breaches of the Post Office Act. In deciding whether these most exceptional circumstances exist, I have to take into account the damage caused by a failure to ensure that the law is complied with on the one side and on the other the risk of grave damage to the public as a whole-(Conservative shout of "By inti-rildation")—if section taken is likely to provoke far more widespread repercussions.

There is a world of difference between that and the right of Post Office workers in general to withdraw their labour.

to withdraw their labour.

Mr Silkin—There is a number of differences. One is that certainly it is the general view and a view tentitively expressed by the Master of the Rolls that for Post Office employees to winddraw their labour as a whole would not be a breach of the criminal law, and accordingly, if as the result of premature action before I know precisely the situation, were postal workers in this sorting office and may be in others throughout Lon-don totally to withdraw their labour, they would not be commit-ting breaches of the criminal law. I should have that in mind as one public interest factor when I have to consider it with other factors.

Mr John Pegton, Opposition spokisman on agriculture (Yeovil, C), opening a debase on fisheries poticy, said the fishing industry had over a few months already lorg to all insents and purposes the whole of its distant water operation.

If there was no change of mind and will on the part of those who now claimed an almost unfettered right to this in the North-east Atlantic the fish stocks in those supers might be virtually wiped out, and in a very few years.

Mr Mason-I told the parties I was Air Mason—I told the parties I was prepared to consider an intering arrangement that involved the devolution of power and responsibility, provided it commanded the widespread support on both parts of the community. The Revlan Poistey did not show any particular interest on that score. He and the DUP were prepared as a first step, and probably no more, to look at the democratization of area boards. area boards.
Mr McNair-Wilson (Newbury, C)—

Could not local government in Northern Ireland be brought into line with the rest of the United Kingdom and in this way the dangers of power sharing be avoided? Mr Mason.—There are eight major parties in Ulster. Four survived the last election and not one at this stage is prepared to look seriously and quickly at a form of county council or upper tier of local-

A Bridge Too Far (a) Leicester Square Theatre: Odeon, Marble Arch

Garm Haya (a) Phoenix, East Finchley Mr Hulot's Holiday

Odeon, Kensington; Odeon, Swiss Cottage For many of us, our vicarious experience of warfare over the past 30-odd years has been closely associated with the career of Richard Attenborough as he has climbed from the boiler-toom of HMS Torrin to the sergeants' mess, the wardroom, a general's staff car and finally the director's chair on his bush a general's staff car and finally the director's chair on big budget films. A Bridge Too Far, which he and screenwriter William Goldman have carried from Cornelius Ryan's paintainely researched account of the Armhem affair, is like an annialogy of his life's work, with a bit of everything from Cockney good humour under gunfire to Whitehall insensitivity.

Cockney good humour under gumfire to Whitehall insensitivity.

What we in Britain call "Arnhem" was "Operation Market Garden", the September, 1944, airborne assault behind the German lines in Holland that might have ended the war before Christmas had not intelligence and logistical failures conspired with fite, hubris and military politics to bring about one of the most costly disasters of World War II. The full extent of the disaster of Market Garden and of the American participation in the operation were not generally appreciated before Ryan's book appeared (not even, let it be said, by those like myself who served with Airborne Forces in the post-war years). Given the immense complexity of the subject and the necessity of cutting from head-Given the immense complexity of the subject and the necessity of cutring from head quarters to from-line and between disbevelled allied invaders and immaculate German defenders. Attendorough has produced a coherent if necessity somewhar simplified movie, thet only occasionally puzzles. Audiences, however, in the flock to big-budget combat pictures to be revaccinated against the virus of Mark; they go to exult in scenes of battle, to identify with acts of courage, and vicariously share in military glory, and A Bridge. If one accepts that the martial-blockbuster is a movie genrewith its own conventions like the Western and the gangster film, then this is a superior example of it, bester written, acted and directed than The Longest Day and The Battle of the Bulge, less pretentious than the bogus Bridge of the River Kurai, and matched only by Patton, which is psychologically more interesting but has far inferior battle sequences.

But one by one they leave for Karachi as insults and injuries pile up. Banks refuse loans, moneylenders extort, Hindu cab-drivers charge special rates, the family house is taken by the Custodian of Evacuee Property, police barrassment builds to a charge of espionage against the family bead, and so remorselessly on.

powerfully affecting performance by the late Balraj Salmi. This great actor brings weight and dignity to the role of the family head who believes in the face of much periodence as the concerns that evidence to the contrary that Allah will provide for all those who patiently wait. Only at the end does the old man learn from his left-wing son that he must take sides and commit himself politically. The conclu-sion, in which he steps from a horse-drawn cab taking him to a Karachi-bound train and a Karachi-bound train and joins a political demonstration, is simple poster-paint stuff. But Sahni's playing just about carries it off, and this final scene must have had a considerable impact upon the Muslim minority in India today to whom Sathyu is talking.

If ohere is one thing on which If there is one thing on which all Londoners would now spree, it is that the planners and architects who occupied postuous of municipal power in the 60s should be put in the stocks, and that when all the available rotten eggs have been thrown they should be made to live out the rest of their miserable lives in the concrete hells they have created. I have often wondered what will happen to tower blocks if —and when—residence in them becomes voluntary rather than something dictated by the fear of homelessness: it was nice to bear the same thought articulated on Wednesday night by the discour the director of the Town and Country Planning Association. Broken only by the news, and a feeble political broadcast in which Michael Foot rambled embarrassingly, London looks emberrassingly, London looks forward may not have been an exactly riveting four hours but it certainly chewed over some of the matters of the moment. It was right, I think, for Llew Gardner and his guests to avoid the "mugging and vandalism" approach and lift their tyes instead to the distant horizon. Enough has been said about the city's social problems for them to be taken occasionally as read; questions about the scale and type of population dispersal needed, about the kind of industry needed, and about the freedom of action desirable for commerce deserve to be debeted in public rather than in secret bureaucratic conclaves.

The Madras House Olivier

Irving Wardle

Marking Granville Barker's hundredth anniversary, here is a production to satisfy even Barker's vision of the exemplary theatre: a hopelessly uncommercial masterpiece presented with love, understanding; and the postinting outlay of acting and design resources which nowadzys lie only within the scope of the subsidized stage. I reckon this event as the Spiritual birth of the new National Thearre, fully match-ing the early pedds of the Olivier regime at the Vic. The director, now as then, is William Gaskell. Barker's play (originally driven out of a 1909 repertory season by Galeworthy's Justice and virtually unrevived since then) is a contribution to the Fabian discussion on female sexual dependence, making the point that economically there is no difference between the wage slave and the married woman However, its polemical theme is handled by a non-polemical writer. Filling a wider social carries than any of Shaw's bluebook plays, it refrains from Shawian prescriptions and treats that makes the Puritan Shaw appear a learing volgarian. Over-fastidiousness has always been held against Barker: but what emerges from The Madras House is his triumphant conversion of a temperamental limitation into a dramatic strength. If nothing happens in the play apart from a business sale and the hero's decision to quiet the firm and join the LCC, it is because Barker recognized that life consists mostly of non-events; and his art consists of dramatizing the habitual and establishing telling social con-exions towards which respectability generally turns a blind

But more often the meaning is implicit through the character's implicit through the character's daily behaviour, as in the superb opening reunion for the family partnership at a Denmark Hill villa (the first of Hayden Griffin's marvellous period reconstructions, ornately occupying every inch of the Ohvier stage and converting it to an illustry proscenium).

The matriartinal dominance of Elspeth March in this scene, filtering March in this scene, filtering through incremes of stiff small talk and redundant introductions, and the squirming attempts at self-assertion by her feebly good-natured husband (a performance to treasure by Paul Rogers) shows masterful command of all the Ayckbourn

Part of his method is suggested in the title. The Madras caught in crossfire between the House is a booming fashion business with one store in Peck (Barbara Hicks) and his House is a booming fashion business with one store in Peckham and an up-market address in Bond Street, and its name combines the sexual lure of exotic costume with Asiatic female subservients. Barker makes this explicit through the mouth of Constantine, the firm's founder, an Islamic convert returning to the boardroom after the disperse of the converting to the boardroom after one score leaving the characters to work. leaving the characters to work things out in their own compro-mised terms under the scrutiny of a hero who may "have un-conventional opinions, but I don't do unconventional things ". The pattern is enriched yet again with a move to Mr Grif-fin's palatial Bond Street rotunda, for a scene divided between business discussion on the sale and a mannequin display. The ironic link between the Huxtable girls, the Peckham livers in, and the parade of worthless dolls actitudinizing under Deirdre Clancy's fantas ric confections of buttoned green velvet and beribboned fish baskets, is intensified by the simultaneous debate with the buyer, an American who wants to commercialize the New Woman question. It is also in this scene (by which time Gaskill's production has imperceptibly entered the zone of fantasy) that Paul Scofield's Constantine makes his first appearance, a grizzled dandy of immense dignicy and sexual poise, turning standard English bypocrisies to ridicule in a sonorous Othello voice Here at last, you feel, is the moral centre of the piece. But not at all: meeting his long estranged wife in the last act, Constantine treats her with Islamarital tyranny operating at mic arrogance and receives a another class level, through the resounding snub from his son, the otherwise passive here of the play (here justifying his central position through the nervous intelligence and observation of Ronald Pickup's pergives way to a plain rectangular formance). #### Women Behind Bars Whitehall

Ned Chadlet

If beginnings were plays, Tom Eyen's Women Behind Bars might have become a classic parody of women's prison films. The opening credits projected in front of the stage hit the right, wry tone introducing Fiona Richmond as "the innocent raped by the system" and introducing the fat drag queen Divine as "the system", otherwise known as the Matron.

.The easy laughs to be had from lesbian rape are next on the schedule, followed by gay bombast, racialist banter and the continuing comedy of women without men. It is probable that the films deserve Mr Eyen's treatment, for the con-sorship code of those days kept the real subjects of the stories buried under innuendo. Not so Mr Eyen, who is wickedly blatant in his comedy, like the boy discovering that the emperor, or rather the Marron. has no clothes.

That is not quite accurate, for it is Miss Richmond who has no clothes. Or rather she cures does, but she keeps shedding copes them; first as she is initiated excess into prison, later when she is tion.

A choir calling themselves the Elizabethan Singers would seem to be laying claim to a repertory which is not properly their own. Madrigals, whether English or Italian, please less when sung chorally, even by a good ensemble of no more than 30 voices, and that is what was proved here. The good things were all in the twentieth-century part of the programme: century part of the programme; the excursions into the early seventeenth-century were un-

Vilas, Ramirez and Lutz join the beaten seeds

Tennis Correspondent Three more seeded players were dismissed from the men's singles in the Wimbledon champonships yesterday afternoon. They were Guillermo yuzs, seventh, and third, Paul Ramirez, seventh, and Bob Lutz, fifteenth, The players beat them were, respectively Martin, Tim Gullikson, and Warwick.

Martin seems to have exclusively left-handed opponents and it was just as well that he had practised with Rod Laver. On Wednesday one left-hander. Ray Ruffels, almost beat Martin in straight sets and had three match points against him, in the fifth set. Yesterday there were no similar alarms for the American. But having disposed of Vilas, he knew that another left-hander would be waiting for him in the next round.

Martin, aged 20, was born in Illinois but the family moved to California because it was con-sidered that would be a better environment for the development of his teams. In 1972, at the age of 15, he became the youngest player ever to compete in the United States championships. In 1973 and 1974, succeeding Bjorn Borg, he won the jumor invitation tournament at Wimbledon. His subsequent progress has been slightly disappointing, certainly by Borg's standards. But Martin has gradually been learning his trade.

This fair-haired youngster with the two-fisted backhand played a good match against Vilas. It would be easy to suggest that the match was lost rather than won: that the deficiencies of Vilas's service and volley would have made him vulnersble to almost any player left in the tournament at this stage. But Martin played him sensibly. He varied his game, gave Vilas no lixed partern to think about, and seldom offered the Argentine much of an angle for counter-hitting.

Today's match went really for me", Martin said later, played as well as I expected and I kept the pressure on. I all I had to do was to try to keep winning my serve. He said he had recently had a good deal of help from Borg's coach, Lennart Bergelin, who had been advising him since the Italian championships. Martin said he was conscious that he had made a big improve-Guikkson is the right-hander of the Wisconsin rwins. He has had an exciting run recently, reaching the finals of the Beckenham and the finals of the Beckenham and Notilingham tournaments. At the age of 25 he has come to prominence rather late. This is because he went into coaching after finishing his education and did not consider he was good enough for a career as a professional competent.

Ramber is one of the most consistent players in the game. But at times yesterday he looked like a man who played tenuis every day of ing life and was incapable a man who played fermis every day of his life and was incapable of producing the extra inspiration the game's greatest tournament demands. But he certainly made a light of it. To some extent Guilik-son helped Ramirez to stay in the match. Guilikson's game was reminishent of beauty and the beast. He played some lovely strokes to reach match point but seemed to become disorientated when it came to winning the next rally. He had four match points in the fourth set, two et 6—5, and two more in the tiebresk, In the fifth set for had a match point at 5—3 and needed foor more when he eventually served for the match at 5—4. So he needed vine match at 5—6. So he needed vine match at fifth set Guilikson was afflicted by cramp in his right thigh. When this was bothering him most, he terrifed to put everything he had into his service and thus produced aces, which saved him a lot of painful dashing about.

Warwick, aged 25, had his first tour in 1971 in the company of when he had 11 match points against Adriano Panasa, the eventual champion, in the Italian championships.

Yesterday Werwick played Lutz on court 14, which has souring terraces communiting a view over seven courts. There is so much to see that court 14 itself is almost an irrelevance. Lutz is a heefy player whose development as a singles competitor has heen seriously hampered by troublesome knees. In the past year or so he seems to have sorted that out and made some progress towards fulfilling his obvious potential. But he still tends to fall short when it comes to winning his tournaments. # Consistent Streeter looks likely winner

By John Nicholls

Nicholas Streeter, of the Solent Fleet, became the overall leader on points after winning one of the fifth races in the Dragon Class series for the Edinburgh Cup at Torbay yesterday. The other race, over the same Olympic style course, was won by Conor Doyle, holder of the Cup, who now moves into third place on points.
Second overall is Tony O'Gorman, another Irishman, whose 8th place yesterday lost him his overnight lead.

Streeter has looked a likely winner all week: he has been the most consistent of the leading

When they finally got, away, Doyle was in the van, as he had been on the two faise starts. He was easily first to the windward mark and opened a way throughout the race to win by a minute, and a half. Simon Day, one of the local helmsmen from the Royal event; was similarly safe in second place.

If Streeter can be said to have any weakness it is in starting and in most of his races this week he has had to come from behind. Yesterday he was third at the windward mark in group B although, to be fair, his start had looked a good one. O'Goman looked even better, yet, surprisingly, was only sixth at the first mark. More surprising still was

Wimbledon crisis over shortage of strawberries

Unless some fresh supplies arrive, shere will be no strawberries, and cream at Wimbledon today for the first time in the nournament's history. The problem, has been caused by a delay in the English crop and a scarcity of high quality foreign strawberries.

Mr Harold Young, chairman of Town and County Carerers, who do the catering for Wimbledon, said: There is a way real chance that Wimbledon will be without strawberries tombrrow. I hast to say it but at the moment we have no idea where out supplies are going to come from tomorrow."

The price of strawberries and cream at Wimbledon went up by 10p today, from $5p to 65p for a bowl of between seven and 10 strawberries. Mr Young said yesterday's price would have been 75p but for a cargo which arrived at Dover early yesterday morning from Italy.

"I was able to buy the tou 8f strawberries it itsed each day at Wimbledon for 90p a th, and this allowed me to sell them at 65p a bowl. At the moment we have people behind the scenes frantically trying to first some more strawberries for us tomorrow. I have been hold by Covent Garden that English strawberries will not be ready antil Saturday at the earliest, and that is if the hot weather continues."

Irish challenge at Auteuil

French Racing Correspondent

Paris, June 23
There are two Irish challengers in the Grande Course de Haies d'Anteuil, the French Champlon Hurdle, at Anteuil tomorrow, Master Monday (John Harty; and Mwanadike (Michel Chirol) will face nine locally trained opponents in the £35,211 prize, run over two miles, four and a half furlongs and 12 obstacles
The best of them could be Tup Gear (Dominique Costard) and Mistigri (Gerard Lefort), both of whom only turned to hurdles this year after successful careers on the flat. Master Monday had an outing over French hurdles here on Sunday, finishing eighth of 16 to Vicam in a handicap hurdle. That was his first outing since fimishing seventh behind Night Nurse in the Champion Hurdle. Alwanadike, who has been board-Paris, June 23

Scotland will also be represented at the meeting, by London Ex-press, in the $11,737 Prix 615 Drags, a two and three-quarter mile steeplechase. London Enpress, who is trained by Harry Bell, will be ridden by John McDougall, as he was when winning three of his last four races, two at Perth ard one at Kelso. However, he will find conditions very different at Auteuil and many of his 16 opposents will probably go too fast for him, particularly in the early stages: Saballion (Roger Duchenel, Hul Down, owned by Sir Christopher Scames and ridden by Cesar Bousignori, Brazidas (Andre Fabre) and Double Phil (Henri Guerin).

scattere, one gamers, was quite something.

It is costing each boy or, more correctly no doubt, his parents, some £400 to come on this tour. Upper Canada College is Canada's leading independent school. This year they played their sunnal game against the adult Toronto chib for the 145th time. Each year some early indoor practice is taken on the achool's covered ice hockey rink but the outdoor season is restricted by other school activities to a mere seven weeks.

Nick Faldo yesterday added a 67 to his overnight 68 to lead the field by four shots at the halfway stage of the 530,000 tournament at Moor Park, sponsored by Uniroyal. Sharing second place are Ken Brown, South Africa's Bobby Cole and the excitingly talented Greg Norman, of Austra-

He went into the trees at both the 13th and 15th which cost his, respectively, a six and a cost his, respectively, a six and a five but making a conscious effort to slow down his swing, he finished with two glorious birdies in the last three holes. Just off the edge of the long 16th in two, he eventually holed from eight feet for his four and, after hitting a seven iron right on the flag at the 152 yard 18th, he closed magnificently with a two. Of the 30 or so competitive rounds he has played over this course, this 67 was his lowest score.

It will be fascinating to see whether Faldo can keep it up over the next two days. He is, of course, a very composed young man and one who, even if only as an amateur knows what it is to win. He was English amateur champion in 1975 and his best effort, to date, as a professional, has been to finish third equal in the Madrid Open.

The Mr Young was trying to size was that peaceful ires were as necessary as at organization and even : to force. He is, of course, right. Even in Rhodesia, guerrilla war is accorded rst priority by the African aments, negotiation and mic pressures are equally say. In Namibia it is obvibut the sporadic raids by capo guerrillas, though they .a lot of white troops, can never succeed unaided diplo-matic pressures must do 95 per cent of the job. How much more daunting is the prospect in South Africa, where the Government is far stronger, and disposes of far larger resources of men and materials so much so that Mr Young himself asked in Johannesburg why so much money was wasted in defence that could be spent in boosting the living standards of the black population, which is more interested in better living than anything else. It is, indeed, the downturn in black living standards in the past few years that is strengthening the militants of the younger generation.

Yet even if, or when, South Africa is surrounded by independent black states—and indeed is riddled with them as well—its ability to survive an "armed struggle" from across its borders is not to be underestimated. Since the much publicized successes of the African forces in Guinea-Bissau and Mozambique (though they, would have been inconclusive except for the revolution in Portugal), much African opinion has become obsessed with "the armed struggle". Particularly so among exiles where talk exceeds action. The danger is, in the case of Rhodesia, that this obsession will lead the Africans to forget that negotiation is an essential component in the struggle for majority rule. For if Anglo-American pressures, helped by South Africa, were abandoned; it would take the guerrillas on their own many years to defeat the small white minority in arms. After five years of guerrilla infiltration the mass of the black population is still hedging its bets. To argue that if the negotia-tions fail the Africans will have to call in Russian or other aid only confirms Mr Young's analysis.

The anniversary of the Soweto and other riots of a year ago shows, however, both the strength of the South African states, and the importance of the threat in-being of urban guerrilla warfare. It is this combination that requires the exertion of the right pressures from the outside. President Carter has made it plain to the South Africans that if their racial policy is not changed, those pressures are inevitable.

Mr Young pointed our that the African block in the United Nations ensured that the libera-tion of southern Africa had the first place in that body's activities. This being so, putting external pressure on South Africa under United Nations mandate is almost inevitable at some stage. The veto which has shielded Pretoria so far will not hold much longer. It is this-the possibility of a steadily growing campaign of sanctions—that will force the pace of change in the Republic, Mr Mondale served an advance warning in Vienna, spurned as it was at the time.

It is not the "armed struggle" or: the !liberation movements' belligerency, that will change South Africa. It is diplomatic pressure, actually provoked by the current stiff intransigence of the Afrikaner establishment, which will do so, and, in the end, perhaps quite suddenly. For so far from being an essential strategic interest to the West, South Africa is being reassessed by the American Government as a liability, a bigger liability than had been thought, and one to be offloaded as quickly as possible.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The guardsman case: issues of sentencing policy

From Lord Hailsham of St Marylebone, CH. FRS Sir, I do not wish to offer any conclusions on the particular judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case of the Coldstream Guardsman. In-deed the letter in roday's (June 22) issue of The Times by Master Thompson renders comment super-Thompson renders comment super-fluous, since it now apnears that the judgment itself was founded on a misapprehension of fact, engendered perhaps by the chivalrous eloquence of the young ensign who was allowed to give evidence on behalf of the samellar.

But a does seem to me that the public discussion has missed some of the fundamental issues raised by the case in terms of sentencing policy. In particular, your own leading article appears to me to ignore the selient point in the case which was the age of the appellant, which I gather was 17, at the time of the offence. Indeed to some extent you appear actually to obscure the point by making, to my mind an absurd, or fraud by a presumably middle aced solicitor, and a serious crime act or train by a presumably middle aced solicitor, and a serious crime of violence against the person com-mitted in passion by an adolescent with the body and strength of a man, and the immature personality of a being just emergent from childhood.

The case is an almost classical instance of the difficulties facing a court confronted with such a problem. How to equate the divergent interests of society, the vindication of public justice, the rehabilitation of an offender at the ourset of his life, the deterrent element required in all crimes of serious violence? The answer is not easy. Nor is it certain that there always is an answer.

The offence itself was, as can The offence itself was, as can now be seen from the transcript, a particularly borrible one, and, in a macure man, it might well by thought that the original three year sentence would have erred, if at all, on the lement side. But Parliament has over the last 30 years, to my mind quite rightly, communously warned the judiciary against imposing any, and in particular long, prison sentences upon the immature, a class most amenable more ture. a class most amenable to re-habilitation and least likely to be deterred by exemplary punish-ments happosed on others and especially hable to loss of self-

At the same time Parliament has ar the same time Parliament has an opposed a wholly irrational ferter on the judiciary, which the House of Lords has recently sought to remove in the Criminal Law Bill by an assemblashe to which, it is to be hoped, the Commons will agree. Faced with an offender the age of the young guardenses, a court is not able, as matters now stand, to impose a sentence of say two years. It must be as much as three years or as little as six months as three pears or as little as six months the this irrational limitation both the trial judge and the Court of Appeal were bound.

the meantime the picture of feminists howing for the blood of a young man when a criminal court hows mercy is not altogether a pretty one. It is all very well for them to talk of male chautinism. If the decision had gone the other way, no doub; other, and perhaps many of the same, cruics would have been speaking of a jud-ciary of middle aged or elderly men imposing savage sentences on the young whose temptations they could not understand. Once one begins to question judicial impartiality pseudo psychological explanations are siways available. Sall less attractive is the spectacle of the renta-crowd group of left wing MPs intent on being in on every act and howling for the blood of the judges. No business witern of justice is immune from error. But if politicians are to demand the dismissal of judges every time it is thought than a sentence is either too lenient or sentence is either too leniant or too severe, any pretence at inde-pendence or impartiality on the part of the judiciary will soon, become impossible. One cannot, perhaps think it a coincidence that these particular attacks coate hard upon Mr Michoel Foot's recent outhurst and are mide by some at least of those who have played a preminent, and perbaps comrover-sial, role in the Grunwick picker

Yours, etc. HAILSHAM, House of Lords. June 22

From Mr Alan Gershan

S.r., I read Mr Justice, Wien's, judgment and the letter you published from the Registrar of Criminal Appeals today (June 22) with special interest because I happened to be pnesent at the appeal as an impartial observer.

I did not hear the very beginning of the arguments, nor did I stay to hear judgment delivered, but I did hear most of what was said.

Lord Justice Roskid never suggested that the girl should have submitted to rape to avoid physical assault. He merely observed regretfully that it was (and I think he used the word) "ironical" that if the girl had allowed herself to be raped she would probably not have been From Mr Alan Gershun she would probably not have been physically assaulted. However, that does not seem to be the most important point in this case.

The Court of Criminal Appeal reduced a well-deserved three years' semence of imprisonment, partly in view of the defendant's excellent previous record and partly to enable him to avoid being discharged from semilable by the Army Rhy where these service by the Army, But what does not come our either in the judgment or in the Registrar's letter is the type of evidence which the Court heard as regards the Army's heard as regards the Army's intentions.

The evidence in question was provided by a young Guards officer who was under the disadvantage that he did not know the defendant personally, had been unable to contact his CO and could only say that the Army had what was described as "a rule of thumb" that if a soldier received and served a if a soldier received and served a sentence of more than three months he would probably be discharged

It occurred to me at the time that if this was to be the main reason for reducing the sentence (and most of the argument was indeed on that point) the judges should have had declarrion of intent from the Army as to what its attitude would be in this specific case should sentence be reduced. Without that declaration the judges seem to have acted on unproved assumptions. Yours faithfully,

ALAN GERSHON, Gerstion, Young & Co. 42 Curzon Street, W1.

From Mr J. Hartley Sir, So, according to Master D. R. Thompson (June 22) If I commit a brutal, sadistic and disgusting criminal assault on a person, for which I am rightly convicted and sentenced to three years' imprisonment; and if my employer then assures a court of appeal that he is anxious that I cominue in his service, it would be appropriate for the sentence to be reduced to six months' imprisonment suspended for two years?

As I read his letter, that is what the Registrar of Criminal Appeals seems to be saying. If so, it is incredible that the punishment appropriate to my criminal violence ould be determined by the atti-

Mr Justice Wien's judgment which you publish today with appropriate anology for "printing passages of remains no doubt in my mind that the Court of Appeal has made a serious error of judgment.

Freedom for employees: the conflict at Grunwick

From Mr Reginald Maudling, MP for Barnet, Chipping Barnet (Conservative)

Sir, Some recent letters in your Sir, Some recent letters in your columns about the Grunwick dispute have been entirely one-sided.

'Mr Grantham of Apex writes m-day (June 23) about "the basic human right of workpeople to join a union". What about the right not to join a union. Is it not equally human and basic? A right in this context implies freedom to do what want to do yourself nor what. context implies freedom to do what you want to do yourself, not what sometime else compels you to do.

Mr Smith (June 21) wrote of the pickets', right "peacefully to communicate information". But this does not amount to a right to compel someone to receive the information if he does not wish to do so. He is perfectly entitled to refuse to stop, and to go about his lawful purpose unimpeded, free from immidation or insulting be-

To give one individual citizen the right to stop another for his own private purposes would run counter to our whole legal structure. It is an essential principle of a free society that no individual citizen is an essential to the freedom he hold. entitled to use the freedom he holds under the law in such a way that by his actions he restricts or denies the freedom under the law of anyone the views of those who want to work will not be affected by peace-ful argument on the part of picketers. By the time the nicket ing stage is reached the argument has generally become public and received appropriate coverage in the press and on radio and relevision. Picketing has, therefore, become an exercise in confronta-tion and intivoldation, which is highly likely to error into violence. I should be interested to know what peaceful arguments (if any) have been addressed to Grunwick workers on their way to work by Scottish miners or other flying pickets or, for that matter, by Ministers of the Crown demonstrating their solidarity with one particular section of the working population.

What justification can there be for the involvement of large detach-ments of police in attempting to preserve law and order in such circumstances and at such risk to I suggest that peaceful picketing

Chichester,

From Mr P. B. Matthews Sir, Both Mr Atkinson (Parliamen-

Sir, Both Mr Atkinson (Parliamentary Report, June 21) and Mr Smirh (letter, same day) are confused about the nature of the protection conferred on pickets by section 15 of the Trace Union and Labout Relations. 'Act 1974. Clearly, if section 15 created a right peacefully procommunicate information and to persuade workers the police would persuade workers, the police would be breaking the law in not permit-ting such communication or persuasion. Ther Mr Arkinson and Mr Smith believe section 15 to confer a right is understandable (and so, therefore, is their anger when they see that "right" frustrated), but it is nevertheless wrong. All that section 15 confers is an immunity from suit or prosecution, so that mere peaceful picketing is not in itself unlawful (for it otherwise would be). But that is a far cry from saying there is a right to picker, and to stop and persuade workers (and the case of Hunt v Broome confirms this).

Professor Hohfeld long ago pointed out the dangers of using the all-embracing term "right" in me all-embracing term "right" in place of the more exact concepts "right" (in the sense of "claim"), "liberty", "power", and "immunity". Thus, if A has a right to stop B and persuaded him not to work, B is under a duty to be stopped and persuaded, and no third stopped and persuaded, and no thrubanty (eg, the police) can interfere. But if A has merely an immunity from suit for stopping B, B is merely under a disability from suing for being stopped by A. and the police's power to control; being a different legal concept (and a higher one in the higher than the police on the bit of the police on the police of the police of the hierarchy, at that), is not in con-flict with the pickets' immunity, for they represent different ideas, and perform separate functions. It is only if both concepts are mistakenly called "rights" that the problem appears to arise. This is not mere semantics, nor is it sophistry. Professor Honfeld showed how numbers of cases in the English churts dealing with labour law have been wrongly decided because of this error. Let this not become another such.

Last November the biggest ever recognition, ballot for white collar autis—of the 11,500 clerical, administrative and commercial staff of ICI at over 70 locations through-out the UK—resulted in 61 per cent voting for union recognition in an 86 per cent poll. Indeed over the recent years, in industry after arise over the issue of balloting, since backward employers tend to regard ballots as the last and unavoidable stage in battles of attrition with trade unions in situations where workers are auxious for genuine unionization and recognetion. Various ploys—including the insistence of hallots where clear majoritles of workers are in union membership, the gerrymandering of constituencies, and the insistence on the framing of louded and biased questions—form part of the armoury of such employers.

It is certainly true that disputes arise over the issue of balloting.

However, ASTMS knows from experience that fairly framed and fairly conducted ballots are often a key part of the movement towards collective bargaining and we co-operate in holding them gladly although sometimes we have had to take dispute action to get a poll. #### Journalists' closed shop

From the Managing Director of North of England Newspapers Sir, Other correspondents have dealt sir, Other correspondents have deal adequately with the odd views of closed shows in journalism expressed (Letters, June 16) by Mr Duggan, father of the joint XUJ chopels at Durlington. Suffice to say that that we are fighting for is the right of people who do not share his particular brand of prade unionization to continue writing for our papers.

Even Mc Duzgan cannot be so naive as to believe that the abi to of a journalist to censor new is no greater than that of a printing worker. Printers have the nower to stop publication but none to impart i political, racial or industrial slant to the news—a for more dangerous form of censorship which is open to journalists only. If the loss of a union card means the loss of richt to write, what price democratic processes?

Dreadnought Wharf From Mrs J. M. Appleton

Sir, Views of London 2: "A Clutch of Barges drifts through a half-deserted Thames Side." I refer to your article on page 3 of The Times of June 15.

This was an unfortunate article as it reflects badly on members of this association and on Dreadnough: Wharf in particular, and I would point out that their premises are far from deserted as ships, barges and road transport vehicles are handled.

The article gave an unfortunate impression as although some river-side wharves are no longer used the members of this association, situated along the Thames as far as Brent-ford upstream and Tilbury down-stream, have neodern mechanical equipment and together with other sections of the port industry are. endeavouring to encourage custo-mers to use the River Thames and the Port of London, but articles like the one in question could do a great deal of harm. Prospective customers would think twice at using a wharf "... a mass of black squares, with a thin chimney, oil drums and splingered timber".

I feel sure 'diat Dreadhought Wharf or any other members of this association would be pleased to have the author of the article that they are for from deserted and that a steady stream of commodities are entering and leaving their premises. Yours faithfully. JEAN APPLETON, Joint Secretary.

Sir, Mr Goodman (June 14) states that the convention of colouring British possessions in pink on maps became established in the 1840s.

However, as can be seen from a page from the Gengraphical Annual. or Family Atlas, published in 1832 with maps produced in 1830, the West Indies islands are listed as British (red); French (Blue); Dutch (Orange); Danish (Purple); Spanish (Brown) and Independent (Green). Red for Britain was therefore established earlier than the 1840s and must have had some other significance than being the brightest printing colour—and is there any particular affinity between the other countries and the listed colours, apart from the obvious orange for the Dutch? Psychology: Thought process in animals

The monkeys were confronted with four different sets of colour discriminations made up from five colours. Half of the animals were trained to associate the reward with the lighter of the two tins and the other half to associate the reward with the heavier of the tius.

Up to that point in the test only simple learning is involved and even very lowly animals have some learning ability. To find out whether the monkeys can use the information they have learnt; to solve a new problem, they were presented with pairs of time, with the colours combined in a new

nell/Esso discovery may | Monopolies inquiry on credit cards

Credit card companies such as Access, Barclaycard, American Express and Diners Club, are to be investigated by the Monopolies Commission. A report is to be prepared within 18 months.

Mr Gordon Borrie, the Director General of Fair Tracing, has taked the Commission to investigate the way the clearing banks, who have issued a rocal 61 million cards, and the two American operations, which have issued a further a million cards between them, treat high street traders, petrol stations, restaurants and other sproliers, who accept the payment by the

But the complaints received by the Office of Fair Trading has spurred the director-general to inquire into the general principles raised by the arrangements between the card suppliers and the traders.

The Commission will look at the level of commission paid by traders to the card suppliers, which ranges from 3 to 7 per cent, at whether the card supplier should make a charge, and if it should be made in the form of a commission on sales as is done mday.

It will also consider whether it is appropriate for the card suppliers to insist that the same terms are given to credit as to cash customers, and whether there is sufficient competition in the terms offered by the card companies to traders.

A spokesman for Barclaycard, which was asible for the huge growth in credit cards in this country by launching its scheme 11 years ago, said the company would cooperate fully with the inquiry.

"About 100,000 merchants throughout the United Kingdom now accept credit cards. In many cases, the cards have replaced in part or in full retailers' own credit schemes, helping cash flow and releasing working capital", he said.

Beer rise just ahead of profits report

More beer price increases are coming—with Scottish & Newcastle putting up most of its beers by 2p a pint on Mon-day—only weeks before the Price Commission completes its report on the profit margins of brewers and licensees.

The Commission's report is due to go to Mr Hattersley, Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection, by July 31. The following day Mr Hattersley and a revamped Price Commission get new powers to investigate prices and profits with the Commission. and profits, with the Commis-sion able where necessary to recommend a price freeze,

There are widespread expectations in the trade that if the report proves critical Mr Hattersley will either act directly—by ordering a deeper investigation of brewers' pric-ing policies including their criteria for calculating return on capital—or leave it to the Commission to investigate specific price rises and companies.

Scottish & Newcastle, one of Britain's big six brewers, yesterday announced an average 2p a pint public bar increase in its own 1,100 managed bouses for most beers except the weaker range. Lager will go up 1p a pint.

Half the time your's production costs mop up the cash films and records: the other halfiey is coming in hand over fisted at Television, as the 68 per cent nent to £11.16m pre-tax in the year larch demonstrates, is in the latter osition at the moment: but the 9.7 yield on the shares at 85p provides uate reminder of the former,

e present showing; however, it is to prove particularly timely. ed Television did well last yearpetter than all the analysts anticin a business whose volatility makes profits notoriously difficult to forepart because the television was buoyant, and in part because efits of recent film successes were ving through to profits.

tde, chairman of Associated Television.

twide, television revenues rose by cent in the year to the end h; and with costs rising very much matically the improvement in the tion to ATV's profits was obviously Jetter than that. And so far there signs that this buoyancy is coming id. Very much the same arguments the film business, where the of the Pink Panther is likely to a money spinner though the s from it will not rise again as they year once costs were covered; and the Muppets are now starting to contribution. se success or failure with a single record can have so dramatic an n overall profits, it is virtually impossible at this stage of the year to make any profit projections. But it is possible to say that the television side is likely to continue to do well, that the film business is unlikely to do worse, and that Ansaphone, last year's one weak link, is according to Lord Grade "looking very encouraging this year ".

It is also possible to say that the balance sheer will look very much better this time round, for both debtors and bank overdrafts have been dramatically reduced by the establishment during the year of a joint company for film production, AGF, whose borrowings are 50 per cent guaranteed by ATV but not shown in ATV's balance sheet In any case, cash flow since the year-end-has been such that—as against net borrowings of £23.6m at the 1976 balance sheet date—the company is now thinking in terms of net cash in the books at the end of the current year.

Under these circumstance the yield on the shares more than twice covered by attributable profits last year, after, it is true, a subnormal tax charge—looks much safer than the group's exposure in so volatile a business would at first suggest. The cut made three years ago has been more than fully restored, and the shares merit muted enthusiasm.

One thing seems

With Recal the question is always: "What next?" And in this context there are two questions. First, can a company which has been producing record profits for approach ing a quarter of a century maintain the pace? Second, will the rationalization of the electronics industry now the subject of so much speculation take place, and if so will Racal energe on top of what has been pro-jected as Britain's "second force" electrical company?

The first question of course is relatively easy to answer, at least in the foreseeable futue. Racal is talking about sales year of at least £200m, an increase of almost two-thirds, and if it can simply maintain current margins—which it expects to be able to do-profits will rise from £32.7m to £53m.

That would include a full year from the United States Milgo acquisition which was in for only a month in 1976-77, contributing £2.2m and £0.2m to sales and profits respec tively. This year Milgo, now reorganized but still requiring some United Kingdom management time, will come in strongly. Racal is projecting profits from data com-munications, to which Milgo is the main contributor, of around £7.5m, of which perhaps £6.5m would be from Milgo.

But of course the £37m Milgo acquisition has also altered Racal's balance sheet: borrowings, heavily dollar dominated, are likely to be above £45m, offset by cash held in the United Kingdom, of some £17m at the

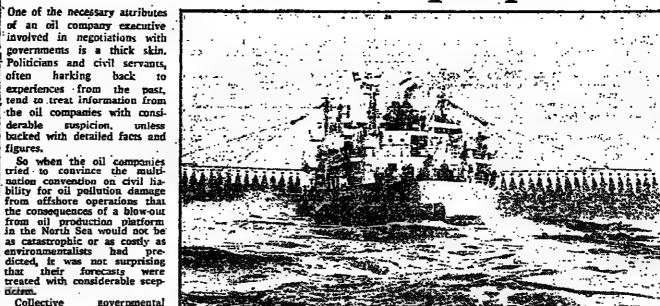

So there is work to be done on the bulance shept and Racal recognize it. But it can be coped with out of cash-flow. Thus, this year, the company aims to write off a large part of the £28m of goodwill, of which £22m came in with the Milgo acquisition.

However, it could take the best part of the year before Racal has achieved the balance sheet improvements it is looking for, and this leads on to the second point about rationalization within the industry.

The company may not be financiall confident enough this year to launch another major bid, though it seems to be an open secret now that if Decca, controlled at present by a small voting capital, came onto the market Racal would bid since Decca's marine electronics business would fit in so well with Racal's land-based mobile communications equipment side.

But if Decca is top of the list, Racal has also thought of Plessey, and so certainly have a lot of other people including the Government. Plessey, for itself, made it clear earlier this week that it would not countenance rationalization, but events are moving against this view. A recent un-published Neddy report has apparently suggested quite sweeping rationalization in telecommunication electronics. Clearly the Government would have to be involved, and equally clearly the rationalization of the turbine generator industry is quite enough for Mr Varley for the moment.

Putting the menace of oil slicks into perspective

Testing the efficiency of pollution clean-up procedures: crude oil being sprayed on to in a series of small quantities it he that would be much easier to that handle. Damage caused by a single blow-out, according to the study, would not exceed $30m (£17.4m) in the very worst incident and in 90 per cent of the 5,000 cases tested, costs were estimated at between $500,000 (£290,700) and $16m (£9.3m).

developed by 1989 and, after feeding in variables like the size of the spill, wind and sea conditions, ran 5,000 different Then came the Eknfisk blowout in April when 22,000 tons of oil were spilled into the sea over eight days. Although an enormous slick formed and attempts were made to clean it up with skimmers, the bulk of the oil evaporated into the air or sank to the bottom of the ocean and in the event none of it found its way to the coast-lines of Norway, Denmark or Holland.

has named Sliktrak, says at although governments would not believe the forecasts that only 5 per cent of the oil would drift to shore, it appeared that the computer had been too pessimistic.
Immediately the Ekofisk

flow had been staunched the Sliktrak team fed the wind and weather data plus the quantity of oil spilled daily into the computer and came to the conclusion that in this case only 1 per cent of the oil would find its way to shore again over-Had their forecast proved correct. Denmark would have been at greatest risk of suffering pollution followed by Norway, Germany and Holland.

There was only a 2 per cent likelihood of any oil reaching Britain, and then only 40 days after the spill.

Mr Guus Glass, one of the Main reason for the under how quickly the oil will dis-utchmen responsible for estimates by the computer was appear through evaporation, Main reason for the under-light oil that caught even the experts by surprise. The Slik-trak study had been based on the mechanical clean-up vessels coming into action several miles from the source of pollution and tackling a thick layer of oil. But because of the evaporation, the slick, when attacked by the skimmer, was far thinner than expected and much less was picked up.

However, the prodigious rate of evaporation more than made up for the below par performance of the clean-up vehicles. Shell has now embarked on a £800,000 study to find out the fate of oil when it is left on the surface including the effect it has on marine life. So far experiments that have involved spilling oil on to the oceans have all been designed to test the efficiency of cleanup procedures and not to see how quickly the oll will disphotooxidation, hiodegradation or natural dispersion.

New that Ekolish has proved that the oil companies were not being over optimistic in their forecasts, there are some comforts that Britain can draw from the basic results. Because of the general direction of winds and currents and the positioning of the fields, Britain is the least likely of the North Sea ceastal nations to suffer pollution from offshore oil operations.

For instance, a study carried out on a blow-out from the Ninean field north-east of the Shetlands, showed that all the oil spilled would drift away and disperse into the north Atlantic Norway on the other hand, is at greatest risk. A study on a 65,000 barrel-a-day spill from the giant Statfjord field lesting three months showed that 100,000 barrels of oil could be expected down a long stretch of the Norwegian

In reaching the conclusion that the cost of clean up work would not be more than $30m for any one incident. Slikurak was working on the assumption that the clean-up costs in the coast zone per barrel spilled were $180. On top of this it was estimated that the first line defence of mechanical chimmers would cost $5.76 a skimmers would cost $5.70 a barrel to use while dispersants would cost about two dollars a barrel more.

The coastal clean-up charge of $180-a-barrel is much higher than for known major spills like Bourry Bay in Ireland, the Santa Barbara incident in Callfornia and the Torrey Canyon tanker disaster.

Many of the components are largely speculative such as tourism losses of $70 a barrel and damage to shipping and fishing gear of $42 a barrel. The actual cost of cleaning up the oil inshore is put at $50a-barrel while the pollution of fishing grounds and lost fishing days between them only account for $18 a barrel.

Using special techniques and equipment, the basic aim of both systems is to reproduce the original sound as realistically as possible. But the practical purpose of these early tests is to detect any deterioration in the quality of reception when coprentional mono or storeo receivers are used.

In broad terms the BBC's prime consideration has been to protect the integrity of stereo and mono reception; while the Ambisonics team has almed at the highest fidelity in reproduction in the context of family of systems.

Much of this theory, he says, though novel and intricate in detail, is bulit on well-estab-lished principles of mathematics and physics.

"The greatest advance has been in the development of a been in the development of a psycho-acoustic theory, cast in a form suitable for design applications. This enables the Ambisonic designs to take account of the properties of human hearing, including the different ways in which our ears recognize the arrival of a sound."
This theory has been developed by Professor Gerzon at Oxford In the middle of the broadcasting process, between the tapturing of the sound of an actual performance and its loudspeakers in the home is the method of encoding-the way in which the additional information is carried on the transmitted signal. In the case of Ambisonics, a compatible set of encoding specifications is available which can provide channel (as for stereo), channel ", three-channel versions which give progressively more com-pletely natural reproduction.

The three-channel version is the optimum for full horizontal sound with four or six loud-speakers, but the "24-channel" version is claimed to be almost as good.

In the BBC's Matrix H system, four separate sound channels are encoded into two signals, transmitted within the conventional two stereo rated at the receiver again and fed to four amplifiers and four loudspeakers.

In their approach to the coding of the directional informa-

Recently the two share their knowledge and experimental experience the object of obtaining the optimum unified coding specification for a system which can be used with both gramophone

The NRDC is already collaborating with Nippon-Columbia as well as backing the United Kingdom-developed Art-Disonics. On the assumption that a unified set of coding specifications will be agreed the corporation would then hope to license the manu-facture of decoders which would tions of a number of systems.

Broadcasting Authority have been investigating the various surround-sound systems, and (beginning with Mahler at Liverpool last night) are now testing Ambisonics in a series of experimental broadcasts.

The choice of a preferred system, the authority says, de-pends on several factors—subiective performance : the decrue rion would be affected; whether the system would significantly affect the coverage of existing it would cause or be vulnerable to interference to or from stations using adjacent channels (and so complicate frequency planning); and the relative costs to broadcasters and International agreement, too, would be highly desirable. Dealers noted that European markets had generally anticipated a nerrowing in the surplus and the Dutch unit was also steaded by a softer trend in the dollar.

Scandinavian currencies traded little changed after being fixed at their lowest point in Frankfurt since the April 1 realignment of the European float.

But most positions against these currencies, in a thin market, had already been taken in London ahead of the long weekend in Sweden.

am confident that the future will a one of growth and expansion" C. Harold Buckley, Chairman

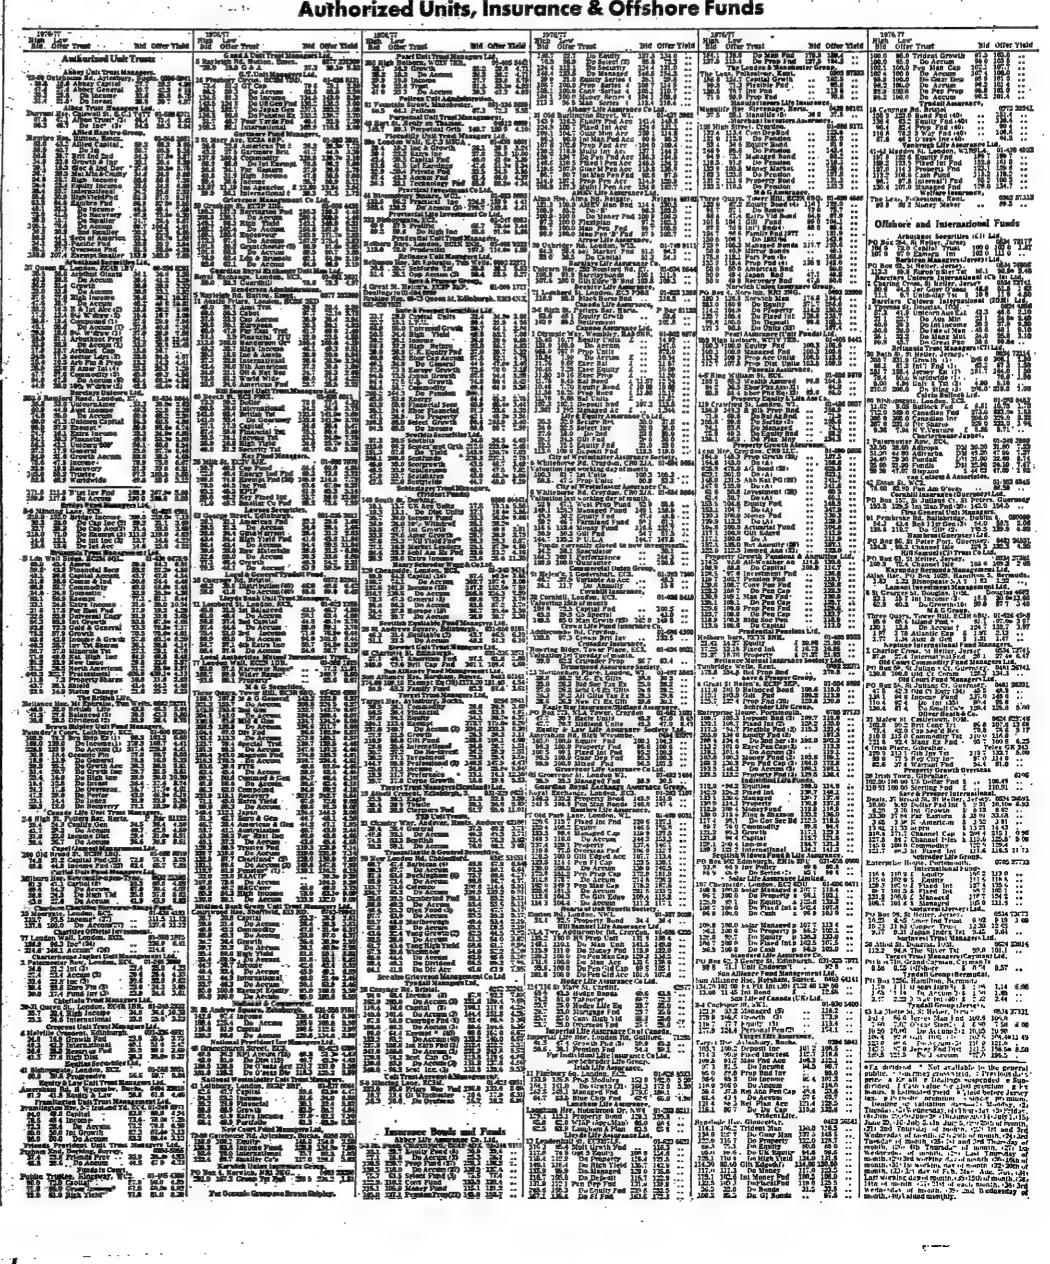

The Annual General Meeting was held erday in Manchester. The following are acts from the Statement by the Chairman, C. Harold Buckley, submitted to the Meeting: Your Company's financial year to 31st ember, 1976 spanned an extremely difficult ling period and it is pleasing therefore, to ort that Group profits before tax and acriinary items amounted to £876,138, pared with the adjusted figure of £448,505 for previous year.

pared with the adjusted figure of £445,505 for previous year.

Turnover increased from £19,521,749 to £18,089 including an increase of 80%, in export a from the United Kingdom which rose from £2,877 to £1,988,827. Following the increase in interim dividend to 0.25p per share (1975 0.243p), r Directors propose a final dividend of 0.395p share (1975 0.3536p) which is the maximum nitted by Government regulations. It is now quite evident to me that the policy nges and rationalisation which your Directors ted to put into effect early in 1976, are inning to achieve results. I am confident that is which have been taken over the past twelve iths will achieve far more satisfactory results as years ahead, although the Textile Industry tinues to suffer from the impact of vast imports we cost garments from countries in the Far t. Your Board believes it is essential that the infacturing units in the Group should be ipped with the most modern machinery, and in capital investment in plant albeit modest, commenced, and it is anticipated that this estment will be continued in the current year. The trend in increased turnover continues and long-term prospects are very satisfactory, in each of the traditional difficulties which currently each of the traditional difficulties which currently long-term prospects are very satisfactory, in e of the traditional difficulties which currently

This is, of course, an in-adequate definition. Of the were granted in Britain last year 42 per cent was built before 1939, and 23 per cent of it was built before 1919.

That is to say, going on for half of the bouses being sold on a building society mortgage today could reasonably be classified as period property. And with the were grænted in Britain last half of the houses being sold on a building society mortgage today could reasonably be classified as period property. And with the housebuilding industry now in catastrophic straits, that proportion is inevitably go-

There were only 28.800 starts made in the first three months of this year, as seamest 41.800 in the first three months of last. If that was partly because of the weather, the figures on a longer series—630,000 private houses completed in the past four years, as against vare nouses completed in the past four years, as against 740,000 in the four years before that—tell a different story. It is a story of bureaucratic complexities, cising the story and the story in the fact these contracts and the story in cratic complexities, rising costs and uncertain demand. Houses can't be built these days for the sort of prices some "period" property sells at—an average of £5.000 for a two-up, two-down Vicfor example; and even if they could be built for the $13,000 asked for the same sort of house in Wimbledon, or the £18,500 which would be asked for it in Richmond's Little Alberts, the builder would have to be certain of his demand to undertake a Drovers, Singleton, near Chichester.

£200,000 is expected for Estate has manor house situated in 38 acres of grounds at Singleton, nuttery near Chichester, Accommodation includes 14 bedrooms, and pool seven bathrooms and a small and pool ballroom. In addition to a swimming pool, tennis court swimming pool, tenms court and small lake, the estate contains a nuttery which produces two cwt of cob and hazelnut a year.

Savills, the agents for Dovers, are also offering a minor bouse in 181 acres at Crackington Haven, Bude, Cornwell. The property will be sold at auction on July 27, and is expected to fetch about £130,000.

Its history stretches back to 1150, when it was one of four manors of St Gennys, owned by Lord Moritain, who was related to William the Conqueror. Situated on a secluded part of the north Cornwall coast, the property is used at present as a mixed stock and arable farm.

Two more Cornish farms have been put on sale by Stratton and Holborow, of Truro. A partly Regency farmhouse is included in Helland Barton, a 137-acre mixed farm at Delahole, and Tucoyse Farm, at Tregony, on the Roseland penfusula, is a fertile arable and stock farm of 166,016 acres. # HELP THE DEAF COMMUNI-CATE

There's much more to deafness than being cut-off from the pleasure of listening to music, or the song

You have to be deaf to know the isolation of profound lifelong deafness. How it deprives people of everyday conversation, the thoughts and ideas of others. How it stunts the progress of education and deprives people of the opportunities that make life

The British Deaf Association urgently needs money to help the deaf, to help families with deaf children overcome their problems of communication, help to develop better educational facilities and create new opportunities for the deaf throughout life.

Please send a donation now, or make a gift by Deed of Covenant (which enables us to recover tax already paid). You might also like to help by remembering the B.D.A. in your Will.
